By installing the Firefox add-on, the default search engine will change to Startpage.com. All your search queries from this browser will go through Startpage.com and will be completely private. 1 Open Firefox. Double-click the Firefox icon on your desktop to open it. 2 Open the home page you want. Open a new tab and visit the page you'd like to see at the launch. 3 Drag the tab to your home icon. Tap and hold the tab for the desired homepage. Drag this to a home icon that looks like a home. The tab is at the top of the Firefox window and displays the page icon and title. The home icon is usually lower or to the right of the address bar. If you can't see it, press the right button (control-click on the Mac) empty space next to any tab. Choose to set up and then look for the home icon and drag it on any toolbar. 4 Confirm the decision. Click Yes in the pop-up menu to change your homepage. If this method doesn't work, try the preference menu method described below. 1 Display the top bar of the menu. In some versions of Windows, the top bar of the menu is hidden by default. Show it one of the following methods (you may need to try more than one): Click Alt. Press F10. Right click the empty space on the tab bar and select the Bar 2 Menu Select Firefox, then preferences. Click the word Firefox from the top of the menu bar, then Preferences from the list drop out. This should open Preferences in a new tab or pop-up window. Some versions of Firefox use the term Options instead. 3 Install Firefox to display your home page when open. Visit the Preference tab and look for words When Firefox begins: follow the drop-off menu. Click on this drop-out menu and select Show my homepage. If you don't see this option, click on the overall tab 4 Change the homepage. Slightly below When Firefox begins: menu, look for words Home page: followed by empty space. There are several ways to set your homepage here: Bring the URL of your desired homepage into an empty space. If you want Firefox to open up when you start pages, share multiple URLs with the trumpet symbol: Click Use current pages to make all your tabs currently open displayed when Firefox starts. Click Use the bookmark... choose one of the saved bookmarks as the homepage. Click The default Recovery to return to The Default Mozilla Launch Page. 1 Visiting on the front page. On Android devices, Firefox's start page is actually a grid showing previews of your top sites. To view this page, click on the title page, then bookmark, then Firefox Start. 2 Attach the site to your front page. On the first page click and hold on to the site that you want to add constantly. Choose a pin site from a pop-up menu to make it a permanent fixture of your first page. 3 Add a new site to your page. If you don't see the site you want on the grid, click and hold a square that you don't care about. This time, choose Edit from the pop-up menu. You can now enter the URL, or choose a site from your bookmarks or the most visited sites. 4 Get out of the app at the end of each session. If you swipe from the Firefox app, it will continue to run in the background. If you want to see your pinned sites the next time you open the app, click the menu icon and select Exit. 1 Firefox Reset. If your homepage is set up to advertise against your will, resetting Firefox is the easiest solution. Note that this will remove all your extensions and add-ons. Your bookmarks and stored password should remain. 2 Remove malicious add-ons. Unwanted add-ons can force your homepage and prevent it from changing. If you don't want to reset Firefox, here's another way to solve the problem: click the menu button (three horizontal lines). Select Add ons. Click Delete next to any supplement you don't recognize. Reboot Firefox. 3 Delete Babylon's homepage. Babylon translation software can change your homepage and other preferences without being able to reverse them. Follow these steps to get rid of the software: Windows: Visit the control panel and then select remove the program. Click the Uninstall button next to Babylon and follow the instructions on the screen. Repeat for babylon's toolbar, browser manager, and browser protection, if any. Now remove all Babylon-related add-ons from Firefox as described above. Mac: Find Babylon in your app folder. Drag it to the basket and then select Finder ... Empty Trash from the top menu. Remove Babylon add-ons from Firefox as described above. 4 Changing Firefox properties (Windows only). If Windows Firefox still takes you to the homepage you haven't chosen, click the right button on the Firefox icon on your desktop and click Properties. Look for the Target field in the Properties menu, and scroll through. If there is a URL in this area, delete it and quotes around it. Don't remove another part of the target field. If you use multiple Firefox shortcuts or task bar icons, you may need to repeat this for each one. To prevent this in Always say no when the program asks to establish your site preferences. 5 Remove malware. If the problem persists, malware that infected your computer can affect Firefox. This may not be removed in Firefox settings, but our detailed guide should help you deal with this problem. Add a new question question How to open an empty tab?
